1334

Plague

The first outbreak of the plague that swept across Europe from Asia was recorded in Constantinople in 1334. From there the deadly infection was spread westward by Genoese traders in 1347-48.

Adult population life expectancy was about 35 yrs.

About $\frac{1}{4}$ to $\frac{1}{3}$ of Europe's people died.

The German spiritualist Heinrich Siise (c 1295-1366) described a vision in which he had seen Christ in the form of an elaborate clock with chimes sounding out the hours. For Siise the clock measured the human soul, keeping its steady, even time in accord with God's born eternal love
